Aquid cheer in with Trepid

The following is out of context, randomly assembled, & quoted from a drunken interview that included numerous redactions. We can float Snow unless ethan enters witness protection...

"So we've been standing there for 15 minutes. Shouting the shit. I've dyed my hair this pasteur."

"Trepid is really really super innocent in Spanish. When we played this house party... it's like our Uga. Kids, lead student UGA kids. They looked terrified of our music."

"Is that a train? No. We Trepid?"

"Yeah, really, but you got... can't really ask for much. We're looking for a little more. I'm getting a beat."

In a previous, it Snowed say we're alive. I well, I we'll continue to make music. I we're going to be putting out new music."

TOWNIE TALK

Gez Manning takes a break from practicing Dutch and listening to Ween (at the same time) to get the inside scoop on Athens newest music venue to smoke outside of.

There has been a recent death in the community- that being the one of Buvez. Buvez was a staple in the music scene as a venue, but also was a safe space for queer people and the queer community. The owner of Buvez, Bain Maddox, is changing the space into a new venue called The Dead Beat Club. Bain agreed to talk to me about the shift in businesses, and this is what I learned. For the Dead Beat Club, he's moving away from the coffee shop format and more towards the venue/bar format because that is "in [his] wheel house". He said that Buvez wasn't working from a financial standpoint, but he doesn't want the demographic to change. He said he won't only be supporting the local music scene, but he will also be "booking national and touring acts". When I asked him about the community feeling upset by the closing of Buvez for another music venue, he said "keeping the community that built Buvez is paramount for me... I will continue to carry the torch for not only our queer community, but all of the communities that make Athens the special place it has always been". So, what? It's always upsetting to see a favorite place close down, but it's important to remember that businesses aren't public services. If it's not working financially, there's no way to keep it open. That being said, though, we are left with one question: where do we go now? Where's the one other spot in town that isn't overrun with old townies or noisy frat boys or country bands with AI fliers? There's a chance The Dead Beat Club will be for us, just like Buvez was, but it's up to us to find our new place and make it ours.

And now... an Ode to Neat Freak

by Imami Andwile

What an honor and privilege it was to be young, gay and stinky during the short yet sweet lifespan of Neat Freak: a punk-folk rock band that consisted of Adaira "Addie" Chapman, Ava Castro, Emma Barnes, Jo Durdin, and Krissy Wechsler. From 2023-2025 these freaks rocked out, hooted, hollered, and danced on many a stage (from Flicker Theatre & Bar to the late Buvez (God rest her soul)). On January 23rd, the band formerly known as Neat Freak had their last hurrah by releasing their one and only album "Neat Freak"; 11 freaky songs about getting advice from your mom, smoking too much, turning wishes into fishes, partying all night long, being sexy hot, and most importantly having fun with your best friends. It's a testament to dykedom, queerness and the punk community. Truly an Athens, GA music staple. Freak nation forever!
